- Our employees are obliged to make use of the legal business opportunities when such an opportunity arises in favour of the Company. Employees may not take any decisions or perform any activities that are contrary to the company's interests or inconsistent with the responsibilities assumed by them. In case of occurrence of a potential conflict, the related employee must notify the situation to his/her immediate manager.

A conflict in the workplace may also occur among people working together. It is a dispute that arises when needs, values, requests or opportunities do not match with each other. Conflicts may result from different reasons, including business practices or change of workplace, negative interactions between an employee and his/her manager, interactions among people working together, competitive needs and demands that individuals may respond to in different ways, leaves, performance, remuneration, appointment, promotion, etc. What must be done includes the following:

- We must be respectful, collaborative, and supportive;
- We must consider the consequences of our actions and behaviours;
- We must encourage our colleagues to speak and raise their concerns;
- We must display behaviours not triggering, but resolving conflicts;
- If it is impossible to resolve the conflict, the employee must consult with his/her immediate manager for resolution of the issue; and support must be requested from the Human Resources Talent Management team if and when necessary.

8. Impartiality

Considering the principle of “Respecting people constitutes the basis of success”, our Bank employees may not discriminate among customers and colleagues based on the differences such as race, religion, colour, age, gender, national origin, financial and social status, sexual preference, physical disability, political opinion and marital status, etc.

Our Bank aims to create a working environment appreciating each individual’s skills and experiences, respecting differences and giving its employees the right to express their ideas and opinions.

9. Considering Public Benefits and Respecting The Environment

In all activities that it conducts, our Bank pays attention to support social and cultural events by adopting the principles of considering public benefits and respecting the environment in addition to its profitability. Complying with environmental laws and regulations, using natural resources efficiently and taking care to minimize our wastes arising from our processes are expected from all employees in accordance with our Bank’s Sustainability Strategy.
